Sazo™

SAZO STAPLER, RELOAD PAIR AND THE GECKO CLAW MARK

Two interlaced rows of titanium staples sit on each side of the blade path, and the anastomosis line runs one and a half times longer than the cutting length — the seal extends beyond where the blade stops, which is where linear cutters bleed.

The Gecko Claw gripping surface holds tissue against the pull of the jaw, and a flat staple pedestal lets the instrument work in a narrow field without levering the tissue open first.

Key Differentiators

01 Seal longer than the cut

The anastomosis line is 1.5× the cutting length, protecting both ends of the transection.

02 Interlaced double rows

Two staggered rows each side for haemostasis without strangling the blood supply.

03 Gecko Claw grip

Tissue does not slide out of the jaw as the staples form.

04 Flat staple pedestal

A low profile bin and pedestal reach into narrow spaces.

Titanium staples throughout. A single-use blade is renewed with every reload, and a safety interlock prevents a spent reload from being fired again.
